treaties without the consent of the Senate, and control Interstate commerce by arbitrarily making road clause of the Constitution making the ridiculous contention that routes traversed by letter carriers in delivering mail were post roads within the meaning of the Constitution.

The wire trust officials, including a son-in-law of J. Pierpont Morgan, that he failed to initiate are indicted after he left office and his recent guilt was proven.

Declaring for the regulation of railroads, he commanded special trains for his own use at the expense of the railroads.

While the United States Vessel Act gave him authority to charter a private yacht to send his children to boat races.

In 1902 he assembled and reviewed the Atlantic Squadron off Oyster Bay, where he lives, at a cost of $750,000.

He has publicly applied the epithet of liar to so many reputable persons that it has become an international joke.

Deplored a $1,000 messenger from Russia, United States Treasury Department to serve as his barber.

He kept the business world in a state of terror, turmoil and uncertainty for nearly eight years and his recent rule would revive that reign of terror.

He has outraged the dignity of the presidential office, violated the amenities of official life and insulted the intelligence of the people; the mother tongue of the nation to the slang and vernacular of the prize ring and the gambling house.

He is utterly lacking in the executive temperament and the calm, cool, exact judgment necessary in a safe Chief Executive.

He abused the power of the presidency by forcing Taft upon an unwilling Congress and candidate in 1908, declaring, "If they don't like Taft they'll get me," notwithstanding his pledge not to be a candidate.

In a letter to Conrad Kohrs, of Helena, Mont., he eulogized Mr. Roosevelt as "one of the best of the best qualities combined all man to a degree which no other man in our public life since the time of Washington could equal," now denouncing the same Taft as a "puzzle-witted" and a "weakling."

Taft never did betray the personal and utter lack of this country's Mr. Taft but attempted to fasten upon him the responsibility as a personal antagonist of this country's Mr. Roosevelt.

His refusal to prosecute the harvesters' trust, which was disproved by the record showing that he had been out of the country at the time.

His most intimate personal friends, supporters, the Pinchots and James H. Garfield, Jr., and Senator La Follette by ostensibly supporting La Follette's candidacy to take advantage of the sentiment against Roosevelt's temporary illness to desert him and joining with Roosevelt in the fruits of La Follette's campaign.

During his administrations he supported Cannon and Canningism in the House and Canningism in the organization be kept in power.

He is now leading the so-called progressive movement which had its inception in a revolt against Canningism.

He has two States in which he has ever lived and which are the best known—New York and North Dakota—both elected delegations to elect him to his third term candidacy.

His 1904 campaign was financed by trusts and corporations and supported by the big game law and a public boss he is now denouncing, including Lorimer.

His present contributors to his present campaign are George W. Perkins, organizer and a director of the harvesters' trust, who contributed himself and others of the New York Life Insurance Company, "personally" contributed nearly $50,000 to his campaign and Governor Hughes, who is one of the policy-holders' money, a transaction which Chief Justice Cullen called a case of appeals, called larceny; Frank Murray, who is Hanna, large stockholders in the steel trust, the latter now under indictment for obstructing justice.

He was discredited and beaten by his own party in his home State of New York at election after he had forced his personal choice for Governor upon the convention wrote the platform and made himself the issue of the campaign.

He has opposed Bryan for Debs as presidential candidates, and is now running upon a platform of opposing Bryan for Debs, while the platforms of Bryan and Debs.

He sells the farmer, the laborer and the salaried employee, and wishes them to have a larger share of the profits of industry than govt. to let them how he proposes to bring it about.

His excuse for being a candidate is that a crisis has been reached in the history of the race since Oliver Cromwell, page 22, he said: "In great crises it may be necessary to overturn constitutions, to disregard ancient laws."

In view of his recent attacks upon the Constitution the presidential nomination given to support and defend the Constitution would seem meaningless in his case, to use no harsher term.

Every day he announced as late as 1911 that "my [his] nomination would be a calamity."

The lawless and revolutionary manner in which he secured another nomination show his willingness to wreck his party to achieve his personal ambition and together with his efforts to unify the fear that he would be as lawless as President as he was as a candidate.

duced to practice. From the practice of this theory, under the pretense of heeding the forms of democracy, it is but a step to cast aside all pretense whatever, and Mr. Taft's constituents have taken this step again and again, and from swindling the people by sharp political tricks they have gone to the point of deliberate theft. Mr. Taft, in encouraging what was done in the Ohio State election, showed an anxious desire to defeat the will of the people by sharp tricks which kept just within the law. But in electing and seating the delegates whom the Taft national committee have put on the temporary roll of the convention from California, New York, New Jersey, Kentucky, Indiana, Texas and other States a much longer step towards dishonesty has been taken. These delegates represent deliberate theft, deliberate robbery. The action of Mr. Taft in thus encouraging and abetting a question even more vital than the one that have legitimately been raised in this campaign.

Before discussing questions dealing with the right of the people to rule and to secure civil and industrial justice, it is necessary to state first for all that when the decision has been made by the people it shall not be reversed by force and fraud. We have a right to as every honest man among our opponents, whatever may be his views as to the principles we are fighting for, to support us in this fight for the preservation of the fundamental honesties of politics. The first and greatest issue between us is the issue of theft. Every honest citizen should join with us in the fight for honesty against theft and corruption.

Issue No Surprise.

It is not to be wondered at that our opponents have been every bit as bitter for the line-up in this crisis as we are, that cuts deep to the foundations of government. Our democracy is now put to a vital test; for the conflict is between human rights on one side and on the other the special privileges used as a property right by the powerful. In ways has come. The Republican party must definitely stand on one side or the other. It must stand by deeds and not merely by empty phrases, for the issue is the humanity, or else it must stand for special privilege. Our opponents are fond of calling themselves regular Republicans. In reality they have no title to membership in any party that is true to the principles of Abraham Lincoln. They are fighting for the special privilege, and for their chief strength is derived from the beneficiaries of entrenched economic and social injustice. I do not

In the least mean that they are all of them, or even a majority of them influenced by improper motives, and more than I would say the same thing of the men in the North who during the Civil War were favorable to slavery and the Union. But most of the of the master spirits among them are strong, selfish interest in restoring the campaign against industrial wrong. The real masters among our opponents are often by no means the men nominally in charge. These real masters of the reaction, these forces have a tremendous personal interest in perpetuating the rule of the boss in politics, with its necessary accompaniment, the guarding of privilege and the closing of the sphere of special interest to the men who stand in the back of the ordinary political leaders who are against us.

They are the men who directly or indirectly control the majority of the great daily newspapers that are against us. Behind them comes the great mass of the press agents, who, because of the channels of their communication, choked, misunderstand our position and believe that in opposing us they are opposing disturbers of the peace. In addition, these are the men who now are the most intelligent and most temperamental and the most willing to progress, and who worship
